PREFACE.

OR great help in completing this part, which contains the inscriptions in the twenty-six churches and churchyards in this Hundred, I am indebted to the Rev. H. T. Griffith of Smallburgh, who kindly copied the inscriptions in no less than eight churches and five churchyards, and to the Rev. F. Procter of Witton, who has copied those in two churches and two churchyards.

As I am now the owner of the splendid collections made by Antony Norris for this Hundred, I have been able to supplement the inscriptions now in existence by printing no less than fifty-one given by him, and now—unluckily—gone.

As the number of church inscriptions printed here is 529 (Norris did not touch the churchyards), it follows that very nearly 10 per cent. of the inscriptions have been lost in about a century. Of these, no less than twenty-one are brasses; a fact which shows how imperative it is that the work which I continue here should be pushed on with all due diligence.

I am glad to say that it is, and that I have also secured two valuable coadjutors in the Rev. A. L. Michell, who has promised to give me substantial help in completing S. Erpingham (begun by Mr. Dew), and in Mr. F. Johnson, who is already at work on the Fleggs, to supplement Norris's History of these Hundreds, about to be printed from my MS. by the Norfolk and Norwich Archæological Society.

It may interest my readers to know that this part records 2,788 inscriptions; making, with those already printed in former parts, no less than 9,770 in all.
